PULASKI, TENN.

FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 20, 1886.

"Don't Care if I Do."

"Thank you—I don't care if I do," said the fast young man slightly under "old Robertson's" influence, as he surged up to the Indian that stands in front of a Tobacco store on Cedar street, Nashville, with a bunch of cast-iron cigars in his hand, "I'll take one—I smoke sometimes," and he reached out to take the proffered weed, but the Indian wouldn't give it up. He hung on like grim death. "Look here, old copperhead," said the fast young man, "none of that, no tricks upon travelers, or there'll be a muss; you and I'll fall out, and somebody'll get a punch in the head."

The Indian said never a word, but held on to the cast-iron cigars. He was calm, dignified, unmoved as an Indian should be, looking his assailant straight in the face, and no muscle moving a single hair.

"Yes! yes! look at me, old featherhead! I'm one of 'em; I'm around; I'm full weight, potato measure, heaped up," and he placed himself in a position, threw back his coat and squared off for a fight. All the time the Indian said never a word, looked without the least alarm, unwinkingly straight into the face of the fast young man, still holding out the cigars in a mighty friendly sort of a way.

The young man was plucky, and just in a condition to resent any sort of an insult, or no sort of an insult. He was ready to "go in," but the calmness and imperturbability of the Indian rather cowed him, and he was disposed to reason the matter.

"I'll take one," said he, "certainly, I said so before. I freeze to a good cigar; I'm one of the smokers—my father was one of the smokers, he was—one of the old sort, and I'm edition number two, revised and corrected, with notes, author's handwriting on the title page, and copyright secured. Yes, I'll take one."

But the Indian said not a word, all the time looking straight in the face of the fast young man, and holding on to the cigars.

"Look here, old gimlet eye—I'm getting riled—my back is coming up, and you and I'll have a tussle. Smell of that, old copperhead!" and he thrust his fist under the nose of the cast-iron Indian who said not a word, moved not a muscle, but kept on looking straight into the face of the fast young man, as if not caring a fig for his threats, or taking in at all the odor of his fist.

"Well," said the fast young man, "I'm around; I'm around; look to your old pumpkin-head!" and he let his hand, square against the nose of the Indian, who never moved.

"Hold on!" cried the fast young man, as he dodged round the awning post. "Hold on! none of that—I apologize—I squat—I knock under. Hold on I say!" he continued, as the Indian seemed to smile with peculiar fierceness. "Hold on—very well—I'm off, I've business down the street; people are home waiting for me; can't stay," and he bolted like a quarter-horse down the street, and his cry of "hold on" died away as he vanished beyond the lamp lights of the last cross street.

Mrs. PARTINGTON says the only way to prevent steamboat explosions is to make the engineers bite the water on shore. In her opinion, all the bustin' is done by cooking the steam on board.

"Jennie," said a Cameronian to his daughter, who was asking his permission to accompany her urgent and favored suitor to the altar—"Jennie, it's a solemn thing to get married." "I know it, father," replied the sensible damsel, "but it's a great deal sadder than to be."

FIFTY DOLLARS have been offered for the pen with which President Johnson signed the veto.
